Isabella first heard of the app through a friend and thought to herself that it could be a good idea for her as well. Late that night while getting ready for bed she decides to install it in hopes of meeting new people.

decides to install it in hopes of meeting new people.

The first person she met was a girl named Jameilla who was the same age as her, going through some of the same things and was also a student at her university. They began talking to see what they had in common the decided to hang out.

After a couple days they both got very close, close enough for Jameilla to share that she's been feeling depressed and even having some suicidal thoughts.

Isabella was able to talk her out of it and get her further help. They then became best friends and both found someone who they can share and talk about how they are feeling without being judged or feeling misunderstood.

Ryan Davis's Storyboard for Oscar

Oscar is stressed out after a long day of lectures, students, and grading essays.

Daily Diary asks Oscar to write about his day.

On top of that, Oscar has only just moved to his new job at the Vermont College of Vermont, so he feels like an outsider, alone.

If Oscar doesn't want to write about his day, Daily Diary can give him a random creative writing prompt.

Oscar reads about an app called Daily Diary and decides to try it himself.

Oscar is less stressed out now that he can vent about his day or hone his creativity with Daily Diary.
